

LUBOV

WARBURG

Contemporary Art In Tribeca

OCTOBER 3RD, 2018

Chelsea and Soho are the Manhattan neighborhoods most associated with contemporary art, but Tribeca more than holds its own. Hal Bromm Gallery, the neighborhood's first contemporary-art gallery, opened in 1975 and is still active today; the newest Tribeca gallery, Ortuzar Projects, is less than a year old. These and other galleries below prove that Tribeca was and remains a destination for lovers of au courant and cutting-edge art.

Lubov

373 Broadway, #207 (between Franklin and White Streets)

This petite gallery is beginning to make a big name for itself, thanks to a run of attention-grabbing exhibitions. Running through October 28, "Prepositions All the Way Down" by sculptor Cricket Lane examines the relationship between humans and canines with objects that incorporate the natural and the man-made. An exhibition of paintings by Daffy Scanlon and sculptures by Chiara Ibrah opens on November 10.

<http://www.warburgrealty.com/nabes/contemporary-art-in-tribeca/>

lubov.nyc
info@lubov.nyc

(347) 496-5833

373 Broadway, #207
New York, NY 10013